ident Roosevelt's Cabinet.

dent Roosevelt to succeed Paul Morton as Secretary of the Navy on July 1, is regarded by his neighbors in Baltimore as one of the most remarkable men of the time.

Above all things Mr. Bonaparte seeks to be practical in every undertaking. He manifested this characteristic when a young man by pushing aside all dreams of a French throne. Instead of putting "Napoleon, Emperor and King" on his front door, he hung out the simpler and more practical sign, "Charles J. Bonaparte, Attorney and Counselor at Law " After all, practising law in the United States is a much more higrative profession just now than that of pretender to a European throne.

Other striking characteristics are his firmness of purpose and the courage of his convictions. Mr. Bonaparte believes in the axiom: "Be sure you are right and then

His practise of doing what he believed was right regardless of consequences was illustrated on the occasion when the overseers of Harvard University were considering the advisability of conferring the degree of LL. D. on President McKinley. Mr. Bonaparte is one of the overseers of Harvard University. He had given the question at issue deliberate consideration, and in a most frank manner he informed his colleagues that in his opinion Mr. McKinley was not worthy of the honor.

Mr. Bonaparte admired Mr. McKinley as a statesman and as President of the United States, but he believed that statesmanship and political eminence alone were not the qualifications for the degree of LL. D. from Harvard; and he backed up his convictions with a negative vote.

Mr. Bonaparte is called a shrewd and brilliant lawyer, but he is best known as a civic, social and political reformer.

Among Baltimoreans his name and that of the Reform League are synonymous, for it was through this organization that the Monumental City was purged of corrupt political practises and obtained an election law that is a model of its kind.

Mr. Bonaparte is 52 years of age and is in the full vigor of his physical and mental attainments. He is a large man, weighing apparently close to 200 pounds, with a large head resting upon somewhat rounded

His head, which might be called abnormally large, is clearly that of a man of high intelligence, yet it is not a head that would command admiration. The face is full and rosy, the eyes black, the mustache of the same color, and stubby.

It is only when he is engaged in debate that he would be picked out as a man above the ordinary attainments. This perhaps is due largely to Mr. Bonaparte's indifference to dress

Being thoroughly devoted to the duties of his law office, he has no time to court Dame Fashion, and when the day's labors are at an end he hies himself off to a fine country seat a few miles distant from Baltimore where fine clothes are not requisite. Considering these facts Mr. Bonaparte may be considered a plainly dressed manhe always wears black-and would be more readily taken for a student, or, perhaps, a clergyman, than one of the most brilliant lawyers in Baltimore, a man of wealth and one of the most conspicuous reformers

He is identified with nearly every educational, charitable and reforming institution in Maryland, has been honored with the degrees of A. B. and LL. D., from Harvard University, and recently received the Lastare medal from Notre Dame Univer-

BALTIMOPE, June 11.-Charles Joseph | a visit to the Napoleon Room at the residence Bonaparte, who has been selected by Presi- of Mr. Bonaparte in Baltimore is a treat. In the home of Mr. Bonaparte one finds himself in a Napoleonic atmosphere. As one enters the room the eye first falls upon a marble bust of the Emperor by Henri Frederick Iselin. It was cut from a marble from a plaster cast modeled from life in Cairo, Egypt, by Louis Corbet.

The marble bust was cut in 1859, and came at that time into the possession of Jerome Napoleon Bonaparte, the son of Jerome Bonaparte, at one time King of Westphalia and grandfather of the present Mr. Bonaparte and the man who married Miss Elizabeth Patterson, of Baltimore.

The bust represents Napoleon in the uniform of a General of the French Republic. The pose is natural and graceful. To one side is another and a smaller bust, in which Napoleon appears in the garb of the First Consul.

In another part of the room, side by side, are the marble busts of Charles Bonaparte and Letizia Bonaparte, the father and mother of the Emperor. These busts are by Canova, and were presented to Mr. Bonaparte's mother by James Bonaparte during his residence at Bordentown.

A portrait of Miss Patterson, grandmother of Mr. Bonaparte, painted in 1825, by Massot, at Geneva, Switzerland, also attracts attention. In this por rait Miss Patterson appears much younger than she was at the time-about 40. There is also a painting of her by Kinson, made about ten years prior to the Massot portrait, and in another part of the room a crayon of her by Stewart is a triplicate portrait on one canvas, showing the head from three different points of view.

To one side is a fine portrait of the Empress Eugenie, and close by a number of beautifully xecuted miniatures of various memers of the Bonaparte family.

A portrait by May, an American artist. painted abo t 1863, shows Jerome Bonaparte, father of Mr. Bonaparte, as captain of carabineers. Another painting shows him in the West Point cadet uniform.

There are also many objects of interest One is a breech loading, double barreled fowling piece, given by Mr. Bonaparte's grandfather to Mr. Bonaparte's father, grandfather to Mr. Bonaparte's father, in 1854.

There is also a pair of holster pistols, which belonged to the Duke of Brunswick, killed at Quatre Bras, two days prior to the Battle of Waterloo. The pistols were given to Mr. Bonaparte's grandfather, who was in command of a division of the French army during the Waterloo campaign.

WANT ATTELL ABROAD. National Sporting Club Ready to Match Him and Bowker.

In all probability the next international contest of importance will be between Abe contest of importance will be between Abe Attell of California and Joe Bowker of England. Negotiations are under way for a match between the two. Al Lippe, manager of Attell, has been in correspondence with A. F. Bettinson of the National Sporting Club, London, who is, by the way, looking out for Bowker's affairs. Lippe is in receipt of a letter from Bettinson to the effect that if Attell will post a forfeit of $1,000 a match can be arranged to take place in London next October or November.

The English club wants the contest to be at 120 pounds, weigh in at 2 o'clock on the afternoon of the fray. The terms suit both Attell and Lippe. There is also some talk of Attell and Britt coming together in Los Angeles in July. Britt is ready to meet Attell at 130 pounds ringside for a bet of $1,000 on the side. Attell declares that these conditions are perfectly satisfactory and that if the papers are forwarded East by Britt Attell will sign them and arrange a fight.

O'Mears Captain of C. C. N. Y. Baseball

Team. The baseball team of the College of the the Lactere needal from Notre Dame University of Indiana as the most distinguished as the most distinguished Catholic layman who during the year had rendered the most efficient and laudable service to the Catholic Church.

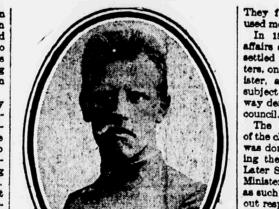

The baseball team of the College of the Norwegian throne. Swedes, whom they have come to hold in distinguished to five five season. With the exception of a game with Bucknell June as captain of the team for next season. With the exception of a game with Bucknell June as captain of the team for next season. With the season is over. The season has been fairly successful. Though a few games were lost during the trips, the team for next season. With two separate sovereign States—under one States against the common formation as the union of two free States against the common formation as the union of two free States against the common formation as the union of two free States against the common formation as the union of two free States against the common formation as the union of two free States against the common formation as the union of two free States against the common formation as the union of two free States against the common formation as the union of two free States against the common formation as the union of two free States against the common formation as the union of two free States against the common formation as the union of two free States against the common formation as the union of two free States against the common formation as the union of two free States against the common formation as the union of two free States against the common formation as the union of two free States against the common formation as the union of two free States against the common formation as the union of two free States against the common formation as the union of two free States against the common formation as the union of two free States against the common formation as the union of two free States against the common formation as the union of two free States against the common formation as the union of

The Bonaparte Who'll Rule the Navy NORWAY'S NOVEL REVOLUTION The Oppenheimer Treatment

Sketches of the Newest Member of Press The Prominent Figures in the Scandinavian Split and the Causes Leading to It.

On June 7 the Storthing, or Norwegian Parliament, declared the union between Norway and Sweden severed and announced that King Oscar II. of Sweden was no longer King of Norway. All the press despatches made a point of emphasizing the calmness with which this news was taken both in Sweden and in Norway.

The Norwegian Army and Navy quietly took the oath of allegiance to the provisional government formed by the Norwegian State Council, and the Swedes, on the other hand, shrugged their shoulders, so to speak, at the bad taste of the Norwegians in seceding from the union. King Oscar alone seemed to show excitement. He registered his emphatic protest against the Norwegian act of secession and em-

They felt that their country was being used merely to extend Sweden's power. In 1885 Sweden decided that foreign affairs should be laid before the King and settled in a council of three Swedish Ministers, one of whom was to be the Prime Minister, and that their decision should be subject to the Swedish Parliament. Norway demanded a full representation in this

The Swedes acknowledged the justice of the claim, but for various reasons nothing was done, and the Swedes went on managing the foreign affairs of both countries. Later Sweden demanded that the Swedish Minister for Foreign Affairs should act as such for the union and for Norway without responsibility to the Norwegian Parlia-phatically declined to receive a formal delegation from Norway.

PRINCE EUGENE

The reason for this lack of perturbation in both countries is that since the King refused to sign the Consular bill passed by the Storthing the act of disunion was practically a foregone conclusion. Besides, the national feeling in Norway which culminated in the act of June 7 is about a century old, and the Swedes as well as the Norwegians have grown accustomed to it.

In 1814-15 the Congress of Vienna recognized the union of Sweden and Norway. Gen. Bernadotte, the Frenchman, who was selected by the Swedish nobles to succeed the childless Charles XIII., last of the old dynasty of Swedish Kings, had just wrested Norway from Denmark. Norway didn't mind being free of Denmark, but almost from the first its democratic spirit made it chafe in the union.

That union was nowise like the union of Ireland and England. There was never any question of home rule. The two nations have always been wholly independent of each other in all domestic affairs.

Their Constitutions are different; they have separate Parliaments, separate laws, separate churches, separate customs and rates of duty. Their armies and navies ment. To this Norway declined to agree. All this time, moreover, other influences were at work. Corresponding to the Neo-Celtic movement in Ireland and to a certain extent to the Slavophile movement in Russia, arose the Norsk movement in

A man named Ivar Aasen made a study of existing dialects among Norwegian peasants and formed a tongue called "Landsmaal," or national language, out of it. The impulse gained; now there is a chair in Christiania University devoted to it; societies were formed to spread it, and newspapers and magazines began to be printed in Landsmaal. The novelist Arne Garborg is its literary supporter.

Then there is, of course, a republican party. The youth and the radical element under the leadership of the national idol Biörstierne Biörnson, the playwright and novelist, have kept up an ever increasing clamor for national entity and independ-

The Norwegian Parliament in 1892 resolved to establish a separate consular service. But for thirteen years no agreement on the matter was reached, and the conflict continued until a feeling of bitterness and even hatred grew up between the Norwegians and the milder, city inhabiting Swedes, whom they have come to hold in

For Alcoholism.

No Suffering.

No Detention from Business. No Injection. No Bad After Effects. Alcoholic Craving Overcome in Forty-eight Hours. All Drug Addictions Successfully Treated.

A Special Committee of the Legislature of New York, Reported in May, 1905

"Recognising that many of these persons (DEPENDENT INEBRIATES) are suffering from isease, so no for no distribution is the suffering from the suff the best treatment therefore is that of the Oppenheimer Institute, as it is strongly endorsed and advocated by large numbers of physicians and business and professional men of high standing, national repute and unquestioned authority; the treatment itself being reported as prempt. tive and free from certain objections inherent in other systems."

Endorsed by many prominent men and women throughout the world

Mr. Anderson Fowler,

of the Produce Exchange,
New York, writes:

(Watch this series.)

"I have pleasure in stating that I have never known the Oppenheimer treatment to fail to cure alcoholism in any instance. The treatment is so simple that is can be taken by a child without injury and it is a rapid in its effect that patients are usually cured in forty-eight hours."

OPPENHEIMER INSTITUTE,

159 West 34th St., N. Y. C.

(2) Name..... Address..... to the London Times defending their re- Gustavus; Prince Oscar, Duke of Gottland spective countries. "All that Norway by her action in the past has ever done," wrote Dr. Nansen on one occasion, "has been to agree tacitly to the partnership as a well defined and practical solution of the question for the time being." He refers to the consular system, whereat Dr. Sven Hedin objects in many columns. He points out how indulgent Sweden has ever been in meeting Norway's demands in order to keep the union on a secure foundation against outside encroachment. Scandinavia, he points out, is just meat for Russia, because India is impossible, and there is nothing else she can take. "If the union be finished." Dr. Hedin declares, "Scandinavia may be changed into a European Corea."

The Norwegians talked of a strong offensive and defensive alliance. Dr. Hedin replied, ironically:

Of one thing I am perfectly convinced, that the number of Swedes who would be willing to accept an offensive and defensive alliance with Norway is exceedingly small. Where on all God's green earth is there one man in full possession of his senses who believes that Norwegian troops would ever put themselves under the command of a Swedish General officer, seeing that Norwegian Consuls cannot any longer consent to act for political purposes under a Swedish Foreign Minister? Dr. Hedin pointed out, moreover, that

Sweden would have nothing to gain and everything to lose by such an alliar co because of her greater armament and resources, and he added besides a lurid picture of Russia, silent, pertinacious and menacing on her northern frontier.

When the consular till was presented to King Oscar on May 27 he vetoed it. The Norwegian Ministry at once resigned as a matter of course. The King could not form a new Ministry.

"The Crown," explained Dr. Namen, "had consequently placed itself out of function in not being able to form a new Ministry, and as the country cannot remain without a government the step [secession and formation of a govern-ment] tecame imperative. add that there is no feeling against Sweden or the royal house, which is clearly proved by our wish to see a prince of the house of Bernadotte on the Norwegian threne."

formerly, but since his marrage to his plebeian wife, Ebba Munck, plain Prince Bernadotte, without the right to the succession, Prince Carl and Prince Eugene. Whom the Norwegians have in mind for their new throne is not definitely known. But if King Oscar persists in his attitude it doesn't matter.

Indeed, all along the possibility of a republic has had its place in the discussions. There has been some talk of Dr. Nansen as a probable candidate for President of Norway.

In the meanwhile the provisional Government of Norway is quietly working along establishing a foreign office and preparing to send a mission to the Powers and ask them to recognize Norway's independence.

> Bussian Names Pronounced From the London Standard.

In consequence of a dispute as to the proper pronunciation of the name of the Russian Admiral, a question was sent to the editor of the Moscow Gasette, who replied as follows

The accent lies on the syllable "dest." There are plenty of Russian and Polish names ending in "sky." but it is only the Polish which necessarily have the tonic accent on the pensitimate syllable. So we have Oboléusky, but N mensicy, Meshchersky, and Gag riceky. Bulifervensky is a purely Russian name, common enough in cierteal circles. It is derived from the word Rollastvo, Birth (of Christ). and signifies belonging to the (church of the) Birth.
In familiar parlance, the name is very generally pronounced Rascofsinski—i. e., the unaccented "e" of the first syllable is, according to rule, given on "a" sound: the "j" is softened into a French "j," and the penultimate "e" is changed into a short "h." This alone is sufficient to show that this syllable is

This alone is summer to show that this syllamb is not of any tonic value.

The following correct pronunctations of a few well known Russian names may be added: Nebsgátoff, Kuropáikin, Battánoff, Gapá, Liniévich, Makároff, Pobedonósiz-if, Mishchenko, Muzaviéff (or properly Muravié D.

A Distinguished Citizen.

From the Boston Herold. Chief Justice Fuller of the United States Stropes court was on a visit to Maine some years age and while there was entertained by Joe Manley. Ha-Manley was held in great regard by his follow-citiens all over Mains, and especially in Augusta his home. He took Mr. Fuller for a drive about the place, but before the drive was finished was broad. place, but be tore the drive was missined was missine by a pressing engagement to be leave his guest.

When Mr. Maniey disappeared the driver turned to the Judge, whom he did not know, and, drawing out a cigar, sahi: "I suppose you don't mind #1 smoke? When we are driving Mr. Manley we never tight up, because he's rather a distinguished dis-

A Barber's View of the War. From the Big Repids Bulletin.

Tonsorialist Nagie ascribes the defeat of the Russians to their wearing whiskers. No nation.

Modesty of the Average New Yorker in the Matter of His Mustache

DR SVEN HEDIN

elected by the people. And it is provided that if three consecutive Storthings vote

The judicial systems, the systems of taxation are different, the trades and resources different and even the fiscal policies of the two countries are different. Sweden is protectionist; Norws.y has free trade.

a measure it becomes law, even though the King veto it.

The Typical Mustache Now Square Cut-Little Headway Made Here by the Fierce German Military Mustache Favored by the Kaiser-Few Mustaches With Curled Ends Seen Here Now.

The character of the American is shown in his distaste for anything spectacular in the way of a mustache, and the small mustache with the pointed tips is likely New Yorker likes to seem to give to such sort of mustache. a detail of his toilet. If the little goatee not attempt it. an upward direction. This is not usual, regiments. however, as the straight, needlelike end is the most popular. men of the kind that New Yorkers are affecting most to-day Capt. Lydig's muscurliness gives it a look of ornateness not copy of that of the Emperor, although it is in keeping with the style called square. less warlike, because its wearer is in the

In the picture of Worthington Whitehouse one sees a typical mustache of the that reason men who might were the com- and copied from the customary mustache bination with profit to their appearance do of the English guardsman. It was grown

Woodbury Kane used to wear a mustache of the same kind, but has cut off the ends The square mustache as it is shown in until it has become fairly representatache is of the same kind, but its natural of the Prince of Pless, is a typical German Elaboration of the square mustache, as advocated by Capt. Philip Lydig.

The square mustache of the New York business man of to-day, illustrated by Justice Vernon M. Davis.

Newport group, composed from left to right of H. G. McVickar, Thomas Hitchcock, Jr., and Woodbury Kane, and showing specimens of each leading style of mustache.

be surprised at anything so very German. former the uncompromising American square mustache and in the latter the German turn-up.

The man who cannot grow a long musarmy for only a few months of the year. settling any style in mustaches. Thus every foreigner with a mustache follows among his customers more of the young the style prevailing abroad and wears it turned up at the ends.

This style is made possible by an elaborate device which is put on at night. Two net wings, not unlike the spread wings of a large butterfly, are strapped over the ears by a rubber band. There is a space between the wings, to breathe through.

This presses down all night on the mustache, which has previously had its ends Foreigners are never regarded here as remain up all day.

"Most Americans," said a barber who has not pointed, but cut off close. This used to be the typical mustache for a cop, but it has now become the style for the men who are able to grow a large there is no opportunity at all to curl them | ment and clings to it still.

came to an end not far from the corners of the mouth. But down over the lower jaw on each side there grew a kidney shaped spot of hair which was purely the result of tache. The hot iron burns the mustache not shaving.

with the mustache, but the style was popular restore. for some years. It always looked best when the mustache had been dyed black.

there was a mouse colored touch to the end of them for a while. whiskers, the effect was still more popular | "In spite of the distaste of Americans in the inner circles of the political clubs. for the pointed mustache, there are many But I hadn't seen a mustache like that in who are very much improved in appearyears until the other day I met a doctor. ance by wearing a small mustache pointed political circles. The mustache proper for work and are afraid they will be con- youd a certain size.

sidered too old if they are gray. I haven't had a bottle of mustache dye in this place for five years, while at one time we used constantly to have customers who came to have their mustaches dyed.

"Americans never want the coun-de-fer which every foreigner orders for his musand after constant use takes away more "These excrescences had nothing to do gloss than bottles of brilliantine can ever

"And its effect does not last very long. The men who do want their mustaches "If the dye had grown a little dingy and | curled are satisfied with the papers in the mustache. The ends are cut off short and He was for a long time proud of this adorn- at the ends. The rarity of this mode makes it impart a certain air of distinction "Dye for mustaches has gone altogether | to wearers and it makes most men inclined There is in New York now, so far as I out of use except in the cheaper barber to sto thess look thinner. The barber pointed upward. By morning the muspointed upward. By morning the mustache has been so well presed that it will that was some years ago very popular in taches dyed black when they are looking will see that it is never allowed to grow becan find out, only one mustache of a kind shops to which men go to have their mus- who looks after a mustache of this kind

The genuine German military mustache, now fashionable in Europe, as exhibited by Count Hochberg. to suggest more care than the average Commissioner McAdoo wears the same is added to the mustache with the pointed tips he looks still more foreign, and for kind popular here about a decade ago as long as possible and then curled at the He has, moreover, abated the deciding turn- from the German Emperor down nearly Sufficient upward curl may be added to | end. Mr. Whitehouse has stopped his the mustache by dexterous manipulation mustache short of any unusual length, with the fingers in place of the coup de fer | but kept it in the form that is popular to if it is desired to give the mustache tips this day with the officers of certain English the case of Justice Davis is a genuine speci- tive of the sharp end mustache now in vogue. The mustache of Count Hockberg, son up at the ends, for fear that Newport might Thomas Hitchcock, Jr., and H. G. Mc-Vickar have mustaches that represent in the tache need not feel sad about it. Long mustaches are distinctly out of fashion for Americans, and Americans are the men who determine the modes in mustaches for their own country.

This style has never been adopted here. men of fashion than go usually to one man, wear 'square' mustache. The ends are